

5 Men Injured When Scaffold Breaks

All Are Urged To Register October 8

An appeal to all citizens of the county to check their registration status and make sure that they will be eligible to cast their ballots in the November 5 election is being made by the Will County Republican Central Committee, echoing a similar appeal made to all citizens of Illinois by Gov. Dwight Green.

A. F. Schupp, county chairman, states that it is feared many citizens who have voted previously but are not now registered in accordance with the provisions of the Illinois Registration Act may disenfranchise themselves by failing to get their registration corrected on or before the deadline provided by law.

"We are especially concerned about returned veterans and their wives, since they have a particular interest in the election because of the referendum on the Illinois Veteran's Bonus," says Schupp, "under which, if approved by a majority of voters in the election, they may receive up to $900 from the State."

The Republican Will County chairman explains that all persons who have had a change of address from one precinct to another—whether or not they were previously registered to vote in Will County—must appear at the County Clerk's office, first floor of the Court House, on or before October 7, and have their registration cards corrected in order to be eligible to vote on Nov. 5. "It is important to note that the change of address cannot be officially recorded on October 8 at the precinct polling place," Schupp adds, "even though new voters and voters who have had a change of name by marriage, or otherwise, may register at the polling place on this date."

The Will County Republican Central Committee also emphasizes the fact that citizens are not required to state their membership in any political party when registering to vote.

WILL COUNTY HEALTH DEPART.

Next Wednesday evening, October 9, at 8:15, on the regular weekly broadcast of the Will County Health Department over WJOL, Mr. Charles A. Kellem, Managing Director of the Joliet Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. A. J. Schroeder, President of the Will County Farm Bureau, with Rev. Paul Saunders, will discuss health problems which are common to both urban and agricultural areas in Will County.

With modern transportation, agricultural areas are no longer isolated from localities of large population concentration. Disease germs that may lurk in milk or water, or in the throats of carriers, do not recognize city boundary lines. Therefore, it is not enough to safeguard the health of the people in our cities without uniform protection for the surrounding area.

Over one-half the counties in the United States have recognized that to have the health work of smaller cities, villages, and rural areas coordinated in a County health department is an efficient method of health administration.

In this way all the citizens in the county have equally good health protection.

At 7:00 p. m. next Monday evening, October 7, the regular monthly meeting of the Will County Board of Health will be held at the High School in Crete. Included in the business to be discussed at this meeting will be the annual report for the Will County Health Department.

Disabled Vets in Schools

Gen. Omar Bradley has instructed all branch and regional VA offices to "exhaust every possible resource" to obtain admission of disabled veterans into schools this fall despite crowded conditions in the nation's educational institutions.

General Bradley, at the same time, called upon the schools to make special arrangements if necessary for admission of these disabled veterans. At the present time, 98,747 disabled veterans are in training under the vocational rehabilitation act and, of this number, 51,790 are in schools and 46,957 taking on-the-job training. This is six times the total number enrolled a year ago. Engineering leads all other courses for those in schools, and mechanics for those in job training.

Questions and Answers

Q. My son's war bride is in France and has a baby. Can you tell me at what age she may bring the baby to this country?—Mrs. C. A. W., Ocala, Fla.

A. The war department says that war brides with babies are permitted to come to the United States at government expense only after the baby is six months old.

Q. How long is the re-enlistment period in the women's army corps? If a former WAC re-enlists will she have the same rate that she held at the time of her discharge?—WAC, Chicago.

A. All former WACs who wish to re-enter the corps must volunteer either for the duration of the war plus six months, or until June 30, 1947, unless sooner relieved for the convenience of the government. Re-enlistment will be in the army of the United States in the grade held at the time of discharge.

Q. My son was in the invasion of the Philippines. He collected a lot of invasion money. I have been told I can get it changed for a certain per cent of our money. Is that true?—P. H., Belmont, Miss.

A. The war department says that regular Philippine pesos were used for exchange during the Philippine invasion. However, if your son obtained any foreign money, except Jap invasion money, he may exchange it through the army finance office, 801 Channing place, N. E., Washington, D. C.

Q. Can a veteran get sugar to open a business such as a bakery?—A. S., Cleveland, Ohio.

A. Yes, provided you meet certain basic sugar qualifications. If you have a honorable discharge and at least 90 days active service in the U. S. armed forces, and if the business will be your principal occupation and if you have owned no other business since your discharge, you should have no trouble in securing sugar for such a business. Contact the sugar rationing division of the Cleveland office of OPA.

Q. My son was reported missing in action in Germany and insofar as we know is still in an "unresolved status." Can you tell me how many soldiers who died in action have not been found or who are unidentified?—Mrs. H. G., Eureka Springs, Mo.

A. Statistics of the graves registration command of the quarter-master department show that 25,547 American soldiers are in an unresolved status. Of this number, 3,929 were buried in U. S. military cemeteries, unidentified; 15,498 are recorded as buried in known isolated locations. In addition, there are approximately 6,132 whose whereabouts are still undetermined.

Q. Will you tell me if a temporary officer in the army can waive his discharge points and request an extension of his period of service, or must he be discharged and then re-enlist?—J. E. G., Mooresville, Okla.

A. The war department says it depends upon circumstances. It is possible that his category may be exchanged for another, thereby extending his period of service. He may volunteer to remain in the army for the duration and six months and request overseas service. Such a request probably would be granted if he is physically and otherwise qualified.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D., Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for October 6

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

PAUL'S BACKGROUND AND EARLY LIFE

LESSON TEXT: Acts 21:39; 22:3, 27, 28; 26:4, 5; Philippians 3:5, 6.

MEMORY SELECTION: Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.—Ecclesiastes 12:1.

God works through men. When we study his work we study the lives of men—all types of men—but all yielded to him, and used by him.

Paul stands out as one of the most influential characters in all history. His life and letters, which we are to study the next three months, have had a tremendous effect on the human race. Especially is this true of his position and influence in the Christian church.

Under God he was the one who carried the gospel to the Gentile world, and then began the great missionary program of the church, which goes on to this very day. His writings are the steady and extensive foundation of much of our study and teaching of Christian doctrine.

I. Birthplace (Acts 21:39).

The place of a man's birth has a definite influence on his personality and usefulness. Tarsus, where Paul was born, was one of the most cosmopolitan cities in the world of that day. It was a Roman province, where men proudly held their citizenship in the great empire. Greek, the language of world culture, was spoken there.

Tarsus was a great educational and university center. It was in a rich and fertile area. It was at the head of navigation on the river Cydnus and on a great Roman highway. It was the capital of the province.

II. Education (Acts 22:3).

After his early training in the home and under rabbis in Tarsus, he went to Jerusalem to study in what was probably the best-equipped Hebrew college of that day, under one of the greatest teachers, Gamaliel.

Somewhere in his rearing he was taught a trade, for every Jewish boy learned to support himself with his own hands (see Acts 18:3).

He was instructed in the Word of God, and had a consuming zeal for religious things. Until he was converted, it counted against Christianity, but afterward it became a flaming fire to spread the truth in all the world.

His combined zeal and knowledge made him a man of truly broad mind and tolerant spirit (Acts 5:35-39).

III. Citizenship (Acts 22:27, 28).

The mighty power and prestige of Rome stood behind every Roman citizen. Paul used his citizenship for protection. It helped him in his service for the Lord. Its prestige was used for God's glory.

It is a good sign when a man is proud of his national background, and it speaks well for the nation to which he belongs. But Paul came (as every Christian does) to know and appreciate a higher citizenship.

IV. Religion (Acts 26:4, 5).

Though a free-born Roman citizen, Paul was a Jew, and loyal to the religion of his people. He was a member of the strictest sect, the Pharisees, in which his family had held membership for generations.

He lived consistently in the observance of the laws and customs of his religious faith, and none could point to any flaw in his doctrine or failure in his life.

When he became a follower of Christ, there was no ground on which anyone could dismiss his conversion and his witness as the outbreak of a new viewpoint on the part of a renegade Jew.

It is to a man's credit that he faithfully lives up to the beliefs of the religion he professes. The result of such sincerity will be conversion, if he, like Paul, meets Christ and honestly faces the question of loyalty to him.

V. Race (Phil. 3:5, 6).

Paul counted it to be an honor to be known as a Hebrew and gloried in the fact that he was born, trained and lived within that racial as well as religious circle.

No one need ever be ashamed of his race, although he may be ashamed of things which members of his race have done. But there are even more things of which to be proud, and a man may add to the standing of his race by living his own life in cleanness of character and nobility of purpose. It is never a commendable thing to be ashamed of the race of one's fathers.

We must remember, however, that all the things in which Paul gloried, he found to be but refuse when he compared them with Christ (see Phil. 3:7, 8).

Everything worthwhile in a man's life God can glorify and use. But none of them, no matter how precious they may seem to be, compares with fellowship with and service for the Lord.

CHAPTER I

Mark Darrell crouched beside his timber-cruiser, Nat Page, at the engine of the motor-boat, peering out through the storm.

Through the great clouds of spray that went sweeping past them, everything was alternately as black as pitch and suddenly illumined again by the one-two, one-two of the lighthouse beam, as it clove the night.

The foghorn, which had been intermittently sounding its dull note for the past hour, had ceased; evidently the fog had lifted, though that fact was not apparent to the two men in the boat, cutting her swath through mountainous seas that threatened each instant to capsize her.

The drenching rain showed no sign of lessening, and the howling of the wind had become an inferno as they approached the lighthouse point, a long ridge of land projecting from the black, rugged coastline of the northern St. Lawrence. The little boat, apparently heading straight for the rocks beneath the lighthouse, seemed doomed to swift destruction.

Nat Page turned and shouted in Mark's ear, "No hope of rounding the point. But there's the little cove among the rocks at the point. We'll make her."

"We'll make her," Mark shouted back.

And neither man believed it, for here, off the point, the seas were frightful. Huddled up in their drenched furs, the two watched the treacherous, black, shifting panorama of shore and rocks, while the boat, already growing water-logged, rolled crazily in the troughs, and barely seemed to surmount the towering crests above her.

It had been a foolish act to start across the St. Lawrence that treacherous noon in spring, when the ice had only lately gone out of the river, and the first ocean liners had but a week before forged their way upstream to Montreal. But those logs in the icebound St. Victor would be ready for running in a week or so, and that would mean a little more cash for the new enterprise. And Horace Broussac's curt note from Montreal, demanding that the sale of the mill and lumber rights be canceled, had disturbed Mark a good deal.

It was disturbing Mark even now, though their lives seemed a matter of seconds rather than of minutes. The thud of the breakers on the rocks was louder than the wind. Straight ahead, visible only when the one-two of the light gleamed, was the tall lighthouse tower, all about it the black implacable silence of the cliffs; underneath the rush and roar of the cross-currents about the point, the dash of the waves, the back-suction of the undertow, the blinding spray.

Mark gripped the side of the boat as a great ledge of rocks rose almost beside them. They had escaped that by a miracle of luck. At the wheel Nat Page was fighting with all his might to keep the little craft head-on, to save her from being battered against the rocks like a swirling log in the St. Victor.

Profits in Pulpwood Interest Mark

With six years' experience working for a company on the second-growth logging lands higher up the St. Lawrence, with the increasing price of pulpwood, Mark had realized that the time had come to take toll of the huge, untapped forest resources further east, a hundred miles beyond Tadoussac and the Saguenay, where summer tourists fish and play golf. With his little capital, and two backers who believed in him, he had seen the profits to be made out of the timber lease on the Kinross Seigniory.

And there was something more to it than the profits. There was the sense of mastery in the taming of the great forests and harnessing of the streams, driving runways, building corduroys, sending the logs swirling down the rapids into the flume. It meant accomplishment, it meant life itself.

The lease of that waterfront section of the Kinross Seigniory had been in the market for three years. None of the big companies had been ready to negotiate. The fall previously, Mark had closed with Horace Broussac, the Quebec lawyer, acting on behalf of his ward, the widow of the late seigneur, who had been drowned at sea with the sealing fleet five years before.

Broussac, smooth, suave, ingratiating, had struck Mark as the type of customer who required watching. But Mark had satisfied himself that the rights were indisputable, and had seen Madame Kinross' signature authorizing her guardian, Horace Broussac, to make the lease on her behalf.

She had been a widow five years, and she was not yet twenty-one!

Mark hadn't seen her the previous fall, when he visited St. Victor. She lived near the lighthouse, of which her late father had had charge. She wouldn't see him, and Mark had sensed an indescribable hostility among the sullen habitants. They lived by fishing, and each spring they joined the sealing squadrons off Newfoundland. They were not woodsmen, like the people of the upper St. Lawrence, probably resented the presence of an American, even though Mark could speak French with fair fluency.

The landlord of the tiny hotel, patronized only by traveling salesmen, had been dour and uncommunicative, a Frenchman of Scots ancestry, like so many of the people. But Broussac had been with Mark, and Broussac had been effusive, conciliatory, and evidently the one man whose word counted in the tiny settlement, where he had a summer home.

The cheap little milling outfit would serve as a start. Loggers, brought from higher up the river, were hard at work along the banks of the St. Victor. Broussac had promised two thousand cords of logs at the runways before spring. Mark was satisfied with his purchase, still more so with the fine growth of heavy timber. For the first time in his life he was his own master.

It was Broussac's curt letter from Montreal that had decided Mark to take Nat Page to St. Victor at once, and look into the situation. There was no transportation in April, except by motor-boat from the south shore. They should have reached the wharf before dark, except for the sudden storm. Now there was about one chance in ten that they might make the little cove at the point. They'd never round that point.

"We'll make her!" Nat shouted once more. His voice was exultant, a defiant challenge to death. A swirl of white water half-engulfed them. The boat righted herself and sped on. Another ledge of rocks, another, leaning up, needle-fanged, out of the white water. Darkness. The eye, the double eye of the light above them—

Then, miraculously, the little sandy beach among the rocks at the point. But they'd never make it. They were approaching it diagonally, and a ledge of rocks on either side shut off the direct approach, and the boat was being sucked sidewise into a vortex of boiling water.

A Miraculous Escape From Drowning

Nat's shout was cut off by the crash of the little craft as the undertow ripped the bottom out of her. She sank like a stone, and in an instant Mark and Nat were fighting blindly in that frightful surge of seething water. And for some seconds Mark knew nothing except the tense, vivid joy of physical combat with the tons of green-white water that hurled him forward, sucked him back, then raised him like a roller-coaster and sent him plunging forward.

His hands clutched gravel. He drew in a deep breath and clung, while the undertow grasped him and buffeted him; then another surge swept him forward again, and, in the double light of the eye overhead, he saw Nat's figure doubled up on the shingle ahead of him.

On hands and knees he crawled forward, over the groaning shingle, still wave-swept, dazed, feeling as if his whole body had been beaten into pulp. But Nat was on his feet now, and staggering toward him. His hand grasped his. The two young men stood silent, motionless, suddenly aware of the miracle that had befallen them.

But voices were shouting out of the rain-swept darkness. An elderly man and a boy, clothed in sleek, dripping slickers, were approaching them, a coil of rope in their hands. Behind them, clothed also in a slicker, a girl was standing.

"They are all right, Madame!" the elderly man shouted to her.

"Bring them up to the cottage immediately!"

She turned, and next moment Mark and Nat were being assisted up a long gravel trail, then up two flights of concrete steps, to the plateau on which the lighthouse stood.

Here were other structures too, presumably housing the stores, the dynamo, and the apparatus for the foghorn, and opposite them was a long, single-story cottage, with a light shining in one room.

The girl turned, holding up a lantern, and inspecting the two young men. She looked about one-and-twenty, her dark hair was tumbled about her face, her hood dripped, and Mark noticed, by the lantern light, the firm setting of the corners of her mouth, odd in so young and beautiful a girl.

"Bring them here, Andre; I will question them," she said. Again Mark thought that odd.

She addressed Mark in French. "Monsieur, we have been watching your boat half the afternoon, and were afraid you would never make the landing. You owe your thanks to God," she said. "There is but one question. Is either of you the Monsieur Darrell, who was here last fall?"

"It is he—this one!" cried old Andre suddenly.

"I am Mark Darrell, and this is Mr. Page," Mark replied. "You must be Madame Kinross, whose lands I have leased."

A growl like a bear's came from old Andre's throat. For a moment he looked as if he was about to hurl himself at Mark. Madame Kinross' quiet, level tones restrained him.

"Be quiet, Andre!" she commanded. "These men are guests. They cannot go back until tomorrow. Put some more logs into the stove in the spare room. And bring them dry clothes. I, Messieurs, shall heat you some soup and coffee."

She disappeared into the back of the house, and old Andre viciously flung open the door of the room that occupied the other wing of the one-story house. It was damp and cold inside, but a flicker of fire came from a stove. Andre lit a candle and placed it on a table. He thrust two logs into the stove, and turned, grinning malevolently at Dan and Nat through his gray beard.

"It was the devil saved you from the sea," he growled. "Tomorrow you can go back to him."

There were two cots in the room. From a closet the old man pulled some clothes—trousers, pullovers, mackinaws, and socks.

"It is because she told me to do so," he snarled. "We do not want you here!"

"Well, there's a nice, pleasant customer for you, Mark," grinned Nat, as the old man stamped out of the room. "I had a hunch folks weren't so friendly hereabouts when I looked over your timber last fall, but if they're all like him—"

Madame Kinross Is Also Unfriendly

"We'll find out what it's about tomorrow," answered Mark.

They had just changed into their dry clothes, and hung the wet ones over the stove, when Madame Kinross' clear voice was heard outside the door.

"If you gentlemen will go back into the kitchen, you will find what I have been able to provide in the way of food for you," she called.

Mark opened the door slightly. "May we not thank you, Madame Kinross?" he inquired.

"Not now or ever," she answered curtly, and turning back into her own room, closed the door.

Mark and Nat made their way back into the kitchen, where, by the light of candles, they found steaming soup and coffee, fresh bread, canned beef and jam. Battered and weary as they were, they fell to with the gusto of youth.

Nat grinned as he mouthed his food. Queerer than I thought," he added. "Seeing that the lady leased her lands to you through Broussac. Must be some explanation."

"Broussac's the sort of fellow who'd try to cancel a deal if he got a better offer," answered Mark. "I've got an idea he'll find some means of getting up here pretty quick. I wired him I was starting for St. Victor after I got that note from him."

They ate and yawned, warm now, and dog-tired. Both were good-looking young men of the virile, clean-cut type. Mark's light-brown head and Nat Page's darker one nodded over the food.

"I feel as if I could sleep a million years," said Mark, staggering to his feet. "I'm going to bed."

"You never said anything better," answered his friend.

PROTECT Your Health

Following is a reprint from the Aug. 2nd issue of this paper, of a warning to Septic Tank Owners, as issued by the Cook County Department of Health.

"Many owners of homes in rural areas dependent upon septic tanks and sub-surface sewage systems for disposal of sewage are unaware of the fact that septic tanks need to be cleaned."

"The action which takes place in a septic tank can only reduce the volume of the material which settles down to the bottom of the tank or which floats to the surface. When there is no longer room in the septic tank for more solids they are forced out into the seepage tiles. When this occurs the sewage breaks out onto the surface of the ground or causes backing up of the entire system. The septic tank should be inspected every summer and when the top scum and bottom sludge add up to twenty inches, the tank should be cleaned. The material from the tank should be placed on a field and plowed under or buried directly. Under no circumstances should it be dumped in a ditch or stream."

"Dr. Piszczek pointed out the danger against discharging the outflow contains disease bearing organisms."

Largest Increase
In Tax Collections

Palos township showed the largest improvement in second installment collection of 1945 real estate taxes compared to the second installment of 1944 among the thirty suburban townships of Cook county, figures completed Friday by the office of County Treasurer Victor L. Schlaeger disclosed.

The Palos figure is $18,073, an increase of $8,065 or 81 per cent.

Runner-up was Stickney township, with $112,502 collected, an increase of $38,228 or 51 per cent.

The next highest were Rich with $25,942 collected, an increase of $8,013 or 45 per cent; Wheeling with $76,688 collected an increase of $2,348, or 44 per cent; and Northfield with $109,050 collected an increase of $32,888 or 43 per cent.

The two largest townships, Evanston and Oak Park were tied in percentage, both recording 24 per cent. Evanston collected $857,672, an increase of $164,572 and Oak Park collected $800,476, an increase of $156,502.

Two counties showed a decrease in their tax collections. Hanover collected $8,936, a decrease of $6,960 or 44 per cent less than last year and Lemont collected $27,424 a decrease of $721 or three per cent less than last year.

George Hagemauer, auditor pointed out that in the case of the smaller townships that one large payment made before September 1 of one year or after September 1 for another year may account for the difference.

The figures for some of the townships follow:

	1945 Col.	Inc. Cent.
Bloom township.	$203,222	$33,573 20
Bremen township	$ 70,128	$13,013 23
Calumet township	$ 71,794	$14,232 25
Lemont township.	$27,424	721 3
Orland township	$ 11,085	416 4
Palos township	$ 18,073	$ 8,065 81
Worth township.	$118,224	$24,845 25

Houses Glued
Together

How would you like to live in a house that is glued together? Well, some day you may.

C. S. Walters, forester at the University of Illinois College of Agriculture, recently visited the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wisconsin, and believe it or not they have just such a house there.

Walters says it is made entirely of plywood, and every place is glued in place. But what is even stranger than that is the fact that this new type of house is stronger than the ones we live in.

But glued houses are just one of the new wonders of wood being perfected at this laboratory, which is a branch of the United States Department of Agriculture. The laboratory's scientists are using wood to make such things as food for livestock, molasses, water softeners and even vanilla flavoring for ice cream.

A GOOD FRIEND AT YOUR DOOR

One of your neighbors will be calling on you very soon. Probably you know him. In any event he can be a very useful friend to you.

That neighbor is your Republican precinct captain. He is the ambassador of the Republican Party to your household. He also can be your representative in your contact with the various branches of your government.

It is his business to know the details of the operations of the city, county and state governments. His information, experience and cooperation are at your service whenever you may need them. He is a man worth knowing.

For instance, if you are not now properly registered as a voter from your present address, he can help you qualify to vote at the election November 5.

He can give you the facts about the Illinois veterans' bonus, which will be voted on at that election. He can show you just how much the veteran in your family will receive under that bonus.

He wants to tell you about the Republican candidates and their program for better schools, lower taxes; he wants to put an end to the national confusion, which has produced scarcity in our land of plenty.

When he comes to your house, let him in. Good friends and neighbors are worth making and keeping.

Bert Childers
and the Melon Patch

Bert Childers put an ad in the Clarion the other day. Here's what it said:

"Planted more melons than I can eat this year. Stop by and pick as many as you want. All free."

As you can guess, plenty of folks sent their kids over and plenty of the parents came too. Stripped Bert's melon patch in no time. And as they went away, Bert treated the kids to lemonade, and offered the grownups a glass of ice-cold sparkling beer.

Naturally it puzzled some folks... but Bert explains: "It gives me a kick to share things when I can afford to—whether it's the melons, or the lemonade, or beer. I guess I just like to indulge my whims."

From where I sit, if we had more "self-indulgent" people like Bert—who believe in share and share alike, live and let live, this tired world would be a whole lot better off!

ONE-TWO-THREE-FOUR-
FIVE-SUGGESTIONS

...to help you make better use of your NEW Telephone Directory

WE TRY to make your telephone directory accurate and complete. These five suggestions, if followed, will increase its usefulness.

- 1 Be sure to discard your OLD telephone directory if it was not collected when the new one was delivered. (Don't destroy it—turn it in for waste paper.)
- 2 If you have a memo list of numbers called frequently, verify these numbers now by looking in your NEW directory.
- 3 Always consult the directory when not sure of the number.

Calling from memory is a common cause of wrong numbers.

4 Look in your directory—don't ask "Information" for numbers listed there. This avoids making two calls instead of one.

5 Use the "Classified" section (yellow pages in most directories) to locate wanted products, services or professional help.

Rufe's Ramblings

One thing I liked about the stores back home was that the same clerk would wait on a customer no matter how varied might be the purchases. Take for instance the Lower End Department Store where we did our trading, all a feller had to do was go in and sit down by the big pot bell—I mean pot stomached stove and wait till the clerk went to the ware room for meat and flour, up stairs for furniture, and to the basement for farm machinery. If I had been so inclined I might have played an important part in the modernizing of that department store, but Rambling was more to my taste, and while I don't claim the distinction of making the front pages many times I am mighty proud of the fact that a former clerk gives me credit for making him the star reporter that he is today. "Did you ever hear the expression, 'Slow as molasses in January?'" he sez to me the last time I saw him. "If it hadn't been for you I might never have believed that such a speed could make a feller the talk of the town over the weekend". It all came back to me then—that Saturday night when I had gone in, handed him my bucket and told him I wanted a gallon, and of coming and standing by the stove while the sweet soppings were oozing out of the bung of a big hoghead in the ware room, so I sez to him, "I remember it all now. I got to Rambling with the group around the stove and forgot all about what I had come for. Never thought about my molasses till I got home". "Well", sez he, "that's why I am a newspaper man today. I forgot all about it too. Never thought about the molasses running in to your bucket till we opened the store Monday morning and waded into the sticky flood."

IN MEMORIAM

SWINFORD, DONALD E. In loving memory of our dear daddy and husband who lost his life two years ago in World War 2.

Somewhere in France, in a soldier's grave

Lies our dear daddy among the brave,

He never shirked his country's call

But gladly gave his life, his all.

Some say time heals an aching heart,

But no, it isn't true,

For two long years have passed,

Dear Don,

And our hearts still ache for you.

Loving Wife, Kathryn Swinford

THE LOW DOWN

I been reading about our foreign policy. Have we got one, says Henry. Sure, I says. Well then, he chirps in, who is in the driver's seat and bossin' same, and seeing that it clicks. Well, I says, the best and shortest answer to your pertinent query is an old seasoned joke. And anybody who has heard the joke 100 times already, he can tune out, or turn to the next page—so here it is.

Anyway, according to the story, a couple Swedish fellows who had taken on board an excess ration of alcohol punch, were headin' for home via fly-

ver. As they rounded a sharp corner on 2 wheels and took some varnish off a tender and lost a tail light, as they bounced off a telephone pole, one feller leaped over and said to the other feller, look out there, he says, where do you think you are goin'—you are gonna wreck this old boiler. What, said the other feller, gee whiz, he says, I tho't it was you that was drivin'.

Old jokes or new jokes—whichever it is—our foreign policy is one of 'em, or has been.

Yours with the low down,
JO SERRA

CULL MOLTING HENS NOW

Now's the time to cull out the hens that take time out to rest. That's the suggestion of Sam F. Riden, extension poultryman at the University of Illinois College of Agriculture. The alert poultryman, Riden says, can save both feed and labor cost by ridding his flock of such birds. The high-producing hen won't molt until much later—possibly November or December and she will continue to lay while she molts or she may stop production, molt rapidly and return to production quickly.

Culling early molters as they show up will cut feed and management costs.

SOW THISTLES CAN BE KILLED KILLED WITH SPRAY

"A weed becoming all too prevalent in Cook County lately is sow thistles," says Farm Adviser Hughes.

"Along with 'Creeping Jenny' this is one of the worst weeds we have. It grows in patches spreading by a heavy mass of under ground roots. The plant looks somewhat like prickly lettuce, but the stem is smooth. However, it gets a yellow blossom about July which mature is fuzzy coated seed cluster, when it is ready to spread.

"There are only two methods of eradication. One is thorough cultivation for two years, allowing the stems to get not over 4 inches above the ground before setting deep in the ground. Cultivation after the middle of summer is better than early cultivation. On a dry fall like this, the ground can be thoroughly dried out and the roots will dry to extinction in one season. But on a wet fall the season may be lost by the ground getting too big before destruction.

"However, spraying small patches with some commercial 2-4-D Spray just before blossoms form will usually take care of them. If blossoms form they should be pulled off as killing will be too slow to prevent seed formation.

"The same goes for 'Creeping Jenny'. Large fields are too expensive to eradicate with sprays at present prices."

Busbey Stresses Illinois Bonus And Voters Registration

In an appeal to get all eligible voters in his district the third, on the registration lists, Fred E. Busbey, Republican candidate for Congress, urges his workers to re-double their efforts to have every voter in their neighborhoods registered.

Mr. Busbey said today, that the November elections were the most important to face the country in years, and the outcome would affect the nation for years to come.

He particularly urged the workers to pay special attention to registering first voters and returned war veterans who may have changed their addresses since first they registered. He said:

"This election is of particular interest to veterans. By their ballots they may right the wrongs they found on their return. While in the service they were not always able to secure adequate information on both sides of any story, but today they have access to all information necessary.

"They should as veterans campaign actively in support of the Illinois bonus plan. Just 'carrying' the bonus is not sufficient, but it must receive a majority of all votes cast for the legislative candidates. Failure to vote is in effect a vote against the bonus.

"Be sure the names of the voters are on the registration lists. Voters can register in their village, city, or township clerk's office or at the County Clerk's office, in Chicago, in the County Building from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. daily and in Joliet, in the County Clerk's office in the Court House.

Busbey, a veteran of World War I, championed veterans legislation while in Congress.

Trace Malayan Ancestry

Roots of the Malayan peoples are traced to the neighboring island of Sumatra, but racial strains have been complicated by Chinese, Arab and East Indian blood. Chief Malayan occupations are farming and fishing. Major crops are rubber and rice. Minor crops have included coconuts, pineapples, coffee, tea and bananas. "Horsepower" to do heavy hauling and till rice fields is contributed by the water buffalo. Among old arts and crafts are pottery manufacture, weaving, lacemaking, wood carving, basketry, and metalworking.

A Nation's Good

By GEORGE S. BENSON
President of Harding College
Searcy, Arkansas

SOLOMON, King of Israel, and George Washington, the first President of the United States, lived about alike. They rode in horse-drawn vehicles, wore handloomed clothes, used animal oil for light and wood for fuel. They lived nearly 3,000 years apart. Think what you have now and remember that Washington died less than 150 years ago; more industrial progress in the last 150 years than in the previous 3,000.

In comparing the American system with any socialistic plan, one point must be held in mind constantly: freedom to think. Nothing is more valuable than good ideas and everybody has them; nobody has a corner on them. Where any person is free to get ideas and put them to work at his own risk, good ones come to light in a hurry and are put to work in a way that helps everybody; that is the American way.

Compare UNDER any socialistic Results system of central planning, only a few are considered worthy to think. They have ideas occasionally, of course, but do not try them out at their own risk. They put ideas to work on a big scale at the nation's risk. By this system the whole people must suffer for the blunders of a few. That's collectivism, and the differences show up clearly, in general prosperity.

America is the most prosperous country on earth. At the last check, national income in the United States was equal to that of the six next highest countries; national income being the grand total of what everybody earns. Under the American system, incomes are different; some higher than others but all high. In socialistic countries incomes are more alike, uniformly low.

Consider PRIVATE enterprise, Workers as a system, has many critics. Students in modern colleges and high schools are able glibly to point out defects in America's manner of life. Admittedly, it is not perfect because nothing is perfect that is made up of imperfect people. Just the same, when the time comes to choose a successful system, pick one that makes the average man richer.

Gentlemen of the Continental Congress, who years ago made some important decisions for us, today deserve a vote of confidence. Will we keep the form of government they outlined and set up for us or do we change to something like that in Britain, France or Russia? Let us make our decision on a basis of results. If we don't make it soon somebody will make it for us.

Selecting our course ourselves, doing so wisely and soon, is extremely important. Small items of business can be bungled today and corrected tomorrow, but not this one. If the United States should once go collectivist completely, it would never be a republic again until people who live now are forgotten. There are no practice shots; we make this decision once, and that's how it will be.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

OCTOBER 6 - 12

ANOTHER CASUALTY LIST

Annual Observance Seeks
Slash in Soaring Fire Toll

WNU Features.

With America's fire losses soaring to an all time high, public support in reducing the terrific toll from fire will be sought during Fire Prevention Week, which will be observed throughout the nation October 6-12.

In his annual proclamation setting the dates for the observance, President Truman said that fires threatened this year to exact the greatest toll of lives and the greatest waste of material resources the country ever had experienced.

He observed this was at a time "when the entire world is faced ber of commerce. "Only through organizations working together can relief be obtained," he adds.

"In today's shortage of housing and building materials it would be in the interests of the American people if they made every week a Fire Prevention Week," declares W. E. Mallalieu, general manager of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Waste Increases.

Pointing out that with the number of fires increasing and waste of property in 1946 reaching its highest point in history, Mallalieu contends that "it is time for every individual to ponder the effects of national carelessness, recklessness and preventable destruction on his own life, job and family."

With monthly losses during 1946 ranging from 11 to 37 per cent higher than last year, indications point to a record-breaking toll exceeding 600 million dollars in 1946. This loss, the result of approximately 700,000 fires, will be more than 30 per cent greater than the 455 million dollar toll in 1945.

Year's Toll Cited.

During an average year, the toll of fire includes: 10,000 lives lost; non-fatal burns to an additional 40,000 persons; destruction or damage of 350,000 homes, 2,700 churches, 2,600 schools, 9,500 hotels and boarding houses, 10,500 restaurants, 1,000 hospitals and 3,100 amusement places; destruction of 50 million dollars worth of farm property; burning of forest lands equal to an area the size of Kentucky, and devastation of enough timber and lumber to build 200,000 five-room houses.

Chief causes of fire are matches and smoking, which account for 30 per cent of all fires from known

DO'S

1. Place plenty of ash trays about the house.
2. Have all worn or frayed electrical cords, or defective electrical appliances, repaired or replaced.
3. Keep a metal screen in front of the fireplace.
4. Clean out all combustible rubbish, old papers and trash from your basement, closets or attic.
5. Keep oily rags, paint rags or oily dust mops in tightly-closed metal cans.
6. Have your furnace cleaned and checked at the end of each heating season. Repair defective flues or pipes.
7. Avoid "forcing" or overheating your furnace in cold weather.
8. If supplementary heaters are necessary, fix them so they can't be moved around or knocked over.

with distressing shortages of food and housing and nearly every commodity essential to speedy reconversion to a peacetime economy."

Urges Precautions.

Insisting that the vast majority of destructive fires are preventable by the exercise of great caution, President Truman asked all Americans to do their part "by learning how to detect and eliminate all possible causes of fires in homes and businesses in order to safeguard both life and property."

State and local governments, fire prevention agencies, chambers of commerce, business and labor organizations, churches, schools and civic agencies are co-operating in the annual observance.

Fire Prevention Week was first proclaimed nationally in 1922 by President Harding although in 1920 President Wilson had proclaimed the first Fire Prevention Day. The observance is held annually during the week of October 9, anniversary of the great Chicago fire of 1871.

Exceeds War Casualties.

Startling evidence of fire's astounding toll is contained in a report that since 1920 more Americans have lost their lives by fire than were killed in all the devastating battles of World War II. During the last decade fire has claimed 100,000 victims, with another 170,000 burned or disfigured for life.

"The destruction of property in the hundreds of millions of dollars by fire is outrageous," avers Pres. William K. Jackson of the chamcauses. Other major causes are defective or overheated stoves and furnaces, misuse of electricity, inflammable fluids and open fires.

Fire losses are heaviest during the winter months, when more heating systems are in operation.

Children are the most frequent victims of fire, with children under five accounting for 20 per cent of all fire fatalities.

Local firemen say that some time or another Detroiters have reacted in exactly this fashion. In fact, firemen are amazed when a householder does anything sensible during a blaze.

Children often have more presence of mind than adults during fires, reports indicate.

FOOTBALL is moving in the direction of its record year. I am referring here to class and talent from over 40 football states. There has been no season before that could show as many fast and powerful teams, due partly to returning G.I.s from the various battlefields of the world. Any one team that can finish this season unbeaten must call on a miracle. There are too many who are good.

For example we might as well take up the matter of All-America backs. We brought this argument up before a group of coaches recently.

"That's simple enough," one of them said. "Why not pick Blanchard, Davis, Wedemeyer and Gilmer?"

"It isn't quite that simple," we countered. "What about Fenimore, Buddy Young and Trippi? What about Tucker of Army or Justice of North Carolina? What about the best back on Michigan, Ohio State or Indiana? Or Patterson of Illinois? What about the pick from Notre Dame and Pennsylvania or Columbia, or one or two from the Southwest, including Texas and Missouri? Certainly Notre Dame should come up with a challenger from the group Frank Leahy has in tow, perhaps Johnny Lujack."

"If anyone is trying to pick the four best," another coach said, "why not put eight names in a hat and pick out the first four?"

"Which eight?" I asked. "Well," the answer came, "here are seven anyway — Blanchard, Davis, Wedemeyer, Fenimore, Gilmer, Trippi and Buddy Young. You dig up the other."

Columbia's Backs

You can imagine how the argument will be in late November. For example, it might surprise many camp followers from the strong Midwest and the strong South to know that Lou Little at Columbia may end up with a better all-around backfield than Notre Dame, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio State, Alabama, Georgia and Texas. The line isn't there but the backs are, headed by Rossides, Kusserow and the brilliant passer Kasprzak, rated by Lou on a par with Luckman and Governall.

With two big tackles, Columbia could give Army, Alabama or Notre Dame an even scrap. But the line is still the front wall. It is the advance post. And Columbia so far hasn't the line needed to face such a schedule.

My guess is that Army has the best first-line backfield in football, with something to spare. This backfield, in addition to Blanchard and Davis, includes a brilliant quarterback and a fine passer in young Tucker. You'll hear a lot more about Tucker this fall than you ever heard before. He can move right up with Blanchard and Davis.

Alabama, Columbia and Oklahoma A. and M. have all-around backfield strength above the normal. So has Illinois with an attack headed by Young and Patterson, two of the best.

I believe the strongest lines are at Illinois, Yale, Notre Dame and Alabama. Notre Dame may have the best of the lot, but Yale isn't far behind. Alabama has a great center in Mancha, one of the best in many years. Illinois possesses top guards and Notre Dame has the best looking tackles.

Oklahoma, Yale Lines

It might be added here that the Oklahoma A. and M. line is one of the best — a point Wally Butts of Georgia might remember for their October meeting. Yale's line is strong from end to end. Texas has all-around strength, backfield and line, and should be hard to handle in the country's major state.

The two best ends of the year should belong to Army in Barney Poole and Foldberg, veterans around 218 pounds who know what it is all about. They will have to be better than good with the tactic problem Army faces. Some squad may have two better ends than Army's big, experienced pair—but I doubt it.

Among the major teams the big guess is Navy. Capt. Tom Hamilton, undoubtedly the savior of college football through war years, is as good a coach as you'll meet anywhere. But Navy has lost more good men than any team in the country. The group of supposed stars under Swede Hagberg two years ago have either graduated, flunked or resigned.

Hamilton has little left from that old crew—Kelly, Scott, Minisi, Jenkins, Ellsworth, on and on, are all gone. Most of the Navy line is missing. But Hamilton still has good football players left, not too many, but enough to give any team a busy afternoon.

Navy took the major rap in post-war football. Where most of the others were getting their former stars back, Navy was taking a heavy deficit. Navy may lose many games. More than two or three. But these games will be fought to the last play with Tom Hamilton in charge.

One more row to hoe

The boy from the farm is on foreign soil today!

Instead of overalls, he's wearing his country's uniform. He's standing watch over the hard-won peace. He's safeguarding your future!

At heart, he's still that farm boy. His laughter sounds the same—when he can laugh. He still goes for cokes and cakes—when he can get them. And he still gets mighty homesick—when he has nothing else to do but think of home.

Your USO has one more row to hoe. Another round of laughs to plant. Another crop of cheer.

Your USO needs your help, as much as ever. For millions of American boys still need the USO. They need the camp shows and clubhouses—the hours of relaxation and entertainment—a place to hang their hats and loosen their belts.

They need to know that the folks back home are still thinking of them—are still willing to pitch in and make their task a lighter one.

Tell the farm boy you're with him—every step of the way. Say it through the USO. Say it with dollars!

Keep it up...

Don't let them down!

WILL COUNTY HEALTH DEPART.

July 1, 1942, as a war emergency measure, and was supported through a budget composed of Federal, State and County funds.

On August 31, 1945, the Will County Board of Supervisors adopted the County Health Department by Resolution, and a few days later the Chairman of the Board of Supervisors established a County Board of Health, naming the following members of this Board: Dr. J. W. Turner, Peotone; Dr. Gordon Ricards, Wilmington; Dr. Raymond Powell, Mrs. A. J. Rademacher, Mrs. Harold Metz, and Mr. Willard Curtis, all of Joliet; and Mr. William Brase, of Crete. Dr. Powell was elected President, and Mrs. Rademacher, Sec.

At the November 5 election the people of Will County will have the opportunity to vote for retaining this permanent local health protection. Sickness of any kind is always expensive to both the individual and the community. The Will County Health Department has contributed substantially to the economic life of this county through their work for the prevention of disease and their promotion of better health for every person within the community.
